

Department of Psychology – American University

The Department of Psychology of the American University invites applications for a tenure track position in Developmental Neuroscience at the Assistant or Associate Professor level effective Fall 2010. Responsibilities include teaching, advising, mentoring and supervising the research of undergraduate and graduate students. Supporting students who are members of groups under-represented in the sciences (e.g., women and minorities) in these arenas is especially encouraged. The position also requires the successful candidate to conduct and publish research and participate in department, college and university service activities. The Department has doctoral programs in Behavior, Cognition and Neuroscience and in Clinical Psychology (APA-accredited) as well as a master's program in General Psychology. Qualifications include Ph.D., experience in undergraduate and graduate teaching and strong evidence of scholarship and research. Send curriculum vitae, a letter describing teaching and research experience, (p)reprints and three letters of recommendation to: Dr. Bryan D. Fantie, Chair, Search Committee, Department of Psychology, American University, Washington, DC 20016-8062 (or bfantie@american.edu). To insure full consideration, application materials should be received by December 1st, 2009. American University is an Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action University. Minority and women candidates are encouraged to apply. This position is subject to final budgetary approval.
